

NO WAGE INCREASE PLANS

for almost half of businesses despite the cost of living increase.

Recent research from the Chartered Management Institute (CMI):

- has shown that whilst there has been a lot of media attention on wage increases, nearly half of firms consulted have no intention of offering pay rises.
- of over 1,000 UK based companies, found that one in three were concerned about the financial performance of their organisations and as a result, 48% were not planning to give employees a pay rise this year.
- states that of the businesses which advised they were going to give a pay rise this year, the average increase was just 2.8%, which was still behind inflation.

How we can help

At Corinthian, we have helped over 350 small and medium-sized businesses (10-250 employees), to provide their employees with an increase in their take-home pay with no increase to the overall cost to the business.

If you employ people and would like to help your employees achieve this, just reach out and we can explain very simply how.
